EDWARD (TEDDY) SHEEAN – VICTORIAN CROSS INVESTITURE

On 12 August 2020, the Australian Governor General, His Excellency General the Honourable David Hurley, AC, DSC, (Retd) announced that HM Queen Elizabeth II had approved a posthumous award of the Victoria Cross to Ordinary Seaman Edward (Teddy) Sheean. In doing so, Ordinary Seaman Sheean, became the first member of the Royal Australian Navy to be awarded Australia's highest honour for valour.

The approval followed a rigorous campaign over some 30+ years for Teddy Sheean to be properly recognised for his courage and bravery under fire during the attack on HMAS Armidale by Japanese aircraft in 1942. Although he was previously mentioned in dispatches for his bravery and, in 1999 had HMAS Sheean, a Collins Class submarine, named after him, the campaign for Teddy Sheean to be awarded the highest honour never faltered.

In July this year, Teddy's selfless actions were appropriately recognised, when an expert panel, chaired by Dr Brendan Nelson AO, recommended to the Australian Government that he be considered for the award of a Victoria Cross.

On 1 December 2020, an investiture will take place in Canberra where Garry Ivory, nephew of Teddy Sheean will be presented the Victoria Cross by the Australian Governor General. Garry will then donate the medal to the Australian War Memorial for all Australians to see and remember the sacrifice that one 18-year-old Ordinary Seaman made to help save the lives of his mates.

A FILM ABOUT HMAS ARMIDALE

A script has been written by Craig Monahan for a film about HMAS Armidale and preproduction including securing financial backing is currently underway.

Craig is a new member of this Association who a few of us already know of. His biography highlights his previous successes and the article he wrote below outlines his vision for the film "Armidale".

If you can assist Craig Monahan in any way or have a contact who may be able to, please email him at armidale.film@bigpond.com or alternatively, contact Peter Savill at peterjune@bigpond.com and he can pass your information onto Craig.

HONOURING TEDDY SHEEAN AND HMAS ARMIDALE – IN A FEATURE FILM AND ON THE AIRWAVES

By Craig Monahan

The awarding of a Victoria Cross to Ordinary Seaman Edward ‘Teddy’ Sheean, will be welcomed by many Australians, not least members of the Corvette Association. He is the first member of the Royal Australian Navy to receive the award.

I am particularly pleased his act of heroism has finally been recognised. For more than twenty years, I’ve been researching and developing a full-length feature film that honours the extraordinary crew of HMAS Armidale. I would like to share my plans with you, their fellow Corvetteers.

The more I uncovered, the more I realised Sheean’s actions are but one part of the fascinating and multi-layered Armidale story, seamlessly blending great individual acts of courage and valor with the horror of war. It realises an extraordinary level of emotional depth and humanity, set against a terrible tragedy, all with a sting in the tail.

The film will be an epic production with dramatic re-enactments of the battle, the survival ordeal, and the subsequent Naval inquiry. We believe Armidale will capture a wide audience. It is similar in scope to recent films such as ‘Dunkirk’, ‘1917’ and ‘Greyhound’. All are worth a look. Financing is under way and there’s more to be done but, sooner or later, it will happen.

When writing the script for the film, I realised there’s not enough time in a movie to present all the remarkable deeds that occurred, so I have decided to produce a podcast as well (like the old radio plays that were so popular back in the day). It will be produced in six episodes, each running about half an hour.

The podcast will also be a high-quality production, with a narrator telling the story, along with sound effects, re-enactments, and clips of recorded interviews with survivors. The search for grants and donations to fund the project has commenced.

You might like to consider how you may be able to contribute to the podcast, as well as providing your own knowledge of Armidale and her crew. Contact details are at the end of this article.

Who we are and the best we can be

We have an opportunity for Armidale to join the ranks of classic Australian stories. To me, it is in the vein of the Anzacs, Gallipoli, the Burma Railway, the Rats of Tobruk; and individuals such as Albert Jacka, Breaker Morant and Weary Dunlop.

No doubt you know the crux of the story, and it’s been covered in recent issues of this magazine, but here’s a snapshot. During World War Two, on 29 November 1942, Armidale, under the command of Lieutenant Commander David Richards, sailed out from Darwin on a top-secret mission. Two days later she was sunk by Japanese aircraft in a three-minute hellfire in the Timor Sea. It was less than six months after Armidale had been commissioned to the Navy.

The average age of her crew was just 21; some were as young as 17. Armidale was the only Australian corvette to be sunk by enemy action, and the loss of life was the highest for any corvette in the War. Of the 149 men on board, only 46 survived the ordeal.

The mission remained classified for more than 50 years, so there was little public recognition for Teddy Sheean and the men who went down with the ship, or the great acts of courage, determination and mateship by those who survived.

As Dr Brendan Nelson, former Director of the Australian War Museum and Chair of the Expert Panel that recommended the awarding of the VC, has said: 'Let Teddy Sheean inspire us to be a people that are selfless, caring and brave.' Herein lies the crux of what we are doing. Armidale is a story about who we are and the best we can be.

People are the Heart of the Story

The film and podcast will not only help cement Teddy Sheean's place among Australia's war heroes, but it also provides an opportunity to highlight the actions of his shipmates and others who were central to Armidale's fateful mission.

They include her Captain, Lieutenant Commander David Richards, and Commodore Cuthbert Pope, the Naval Officer in Charge of Darwin and responsible for sea movements and Naval activities.

In 1942, Pope and Richards found themselves in the front line of Australia's wartime defence.

There were the men with Richards on the bridge: First Lieutenant William Whitting; Gunnery Officer Lloyd Palmer; Coxswain Russ Caro on the wheel; Engineer Officer Harry Jenkyn; Signalmen George Devlin and Arthur Lansbury; Anti-Submarine Officer James Buckland; and Ordinary Seaman Johnny Parker at the starboard telegraph.

We can bring to light little-known roles, like those of Ordinary Seaman Ray Leonard, whose job was to operate the PAC, a missile housed on the roof of the bridge. When launched, the rocket released a parachute from which dangled a mass of wires intended to foul the propellers of approaching fighter planes. An interesting idea, but it didn't work.

What I really want to highlight, and the core of the story, is the power of human spirit; the individual acts by so many members of the crew that reflect the proudest traditions of Corvetteers, for example:

- As Armidale was preparing to set sail, Leading Seaman Leigh Bool had the foresight to gather wooden planks and other spare timber from around the wharf, and had them lashed to the railings of the ship's upper deck, a move that would prove vital to the survival of many of his crewmates.
- Ordinary Seaman Bill Read was knocked unconscious by the first torpedo blast and came to as the ship was keeling over. Rather than immediately abandoning ship, he began winding out the davits holding the whaler, which eventually came free from the ship, thus saving many lives.
- Even as the enemy aircraft swooped in, Wireman Bill Lamshed slipped the minesweeping floats free from their mountings so they could be used as rafts. He was then thrown into the water by the torpedo blast, hauled himself onto the motorboat, and began helping survivors aboard.
- Ordinary Seaman Ted Morley was hit by a hail of bullets and found that half his jaw had been blown away, yet he survived for five grueling days and nights in the motorboat, even insisting on helping with the bailing until rescued.
- Following the sinking, the whaler was submerged just below the surface. Though weak from lack of food and treading water for three days, the men were able to re-float and patch up the whaler, using a combination of ingenuity and sheer willpower.
- As the motor on the motorboat was not working, the leaking craft had to be rowed. Motor Mechanic Les Higgins and Engine Room Artificer Dick Maddox stripped the motor down, reassembled it, and got it going, saving precious days.

And through the podcast we can give a voice to these men, with heartfelt recordings by some of the survivors, like this from Ordinary Seaman Ray Leonard:

“The ship was not inanimate, it was a dynamic, living thing. It was almost as if it paused and stopped for a second. It might have been in my imagination ... but that’s how it seemed to me, almost as if it were reluctant to disappear, and of course it just slid under. And that was probably, apart from the death of my parents, the saddest moment in my life.”

It’s anecdotes like these that motivated me to write the film and podcast.

“Australia Needs to Know”

In doing my research, another comment that moved me was by Ordinary Seaman Rex Pullen, recalling his ordeal on the whaler:

“What I want people to know is that there is deep down in the Aussie creature a mentality whereby he can get himself out of these peculiar situations very well. No doubt a lot of other nations can too. But what I saw of these twenty-eight other fellows, what they put up with, what they did, their determination, their grit and the mere fact that they weren’t going to be beaten. It is just good stuff and I’m terribly proud of the Australian people.”

Through the film and the podcast, the feats of those who survived can finally be acknowledged by the wider Australian public.

The little-known facts

How many know that Armidale was transporting a contingent of 61 Javanese soldiers and 2 Dutch officers to Timor? As you can imagine, it was an overcrowded ship that set off on that fateful day.

We’ll go into more detail of what happened to the men on board during the three minutes between the first torpedo hit and Armidale sinking, and the harrowing moments after they abandoned ship.

The film and podcast will also explore why it took so long for the survivors to be found, and how they endured the unimaginable hardship, faced with circling sharks, hunger, thirst, exhaustion, and the blazing tropical sun.

Richards, being the only experienced navigator in the crew, took the most seriously wounded in the motorboat and headed for a known reconnaissance area. Two days later, the whaler was refloated. The remaining sailors split into two groups, one on the makeshift raft and the other on the whaler.

Five days after the sinking, the motorboat was picked up and Richards was able to direct an air search. It was another three days before the crew on the whaler were also rescued. Despite desperate searches, the men on the raft were never seen again (see picture).

The Navy held a full inquiry into the sinking. Lieutenant Commander Richards was exonerated; however, he was not given another command for the remainder of the war. Within two weeks of the inquiry, Commodore Pope was quietly transferred to the port of Fremantle.

That the story remained classified for five decades is one of the reasons why Armidale and her crew have never received the public recognition they deserve for their incredible bravery. Now that Teddy Sheean has been awarded the Victoria Cross, that injustice can finally be remedied.

If you’re able to contribute to the production of the podcast, or would like to provide your own stories or memories of Armidale and her crew, please contact me by email: armidale.film@bigpond.com Or listen to our 6 minute podcast ‘trailer’ on YouTube. ADDRESS GIVEN BY REX PULLEN
HMAS ARMIDALE SURVIVOR
TEDDY SHEEAN MEMORIAL UNVEILING IN LATROBE 1992

Rex Pullen (Ordinary Seaman HMAS ARMIDALE) was very active during the 1980's in keeping alive the memory of HMAS Armidale.

Rex would write endless letters to other survivors and was instrumental in the City of Armidale, NSW and the Royal Australian Navy jointly hosting the 50th Anniversary of the loss of HMAS Armidale.

Accordingly, many events were held in Armidale over three days to acknowledge the occasion with the most moving being the Survivors Dinner, held Tuesday 1st December 1992.

During this event Rex gave a very eloquent address on behalf of all those present which numbered 17 of the 18 still alive 50 years after the sinking.

Again, less than two weeks later 12th December 1992 Rex was called upon to give another address at the Teddy Sheean Memorial unveiling in Latrobe, Tasmania.

The following pages include copies of both speeches made by Rex, as well as a photograph of the Survivors, all who attended several events in Armidale in December 1992.

Back Row: Ray Raymond, Bill Lamshed, Jack Callander, Ray Leonard, Col Madigan, John Parker, Arthur Lansbury, Bob Cairns, Bill Read, Bill McKeller, Lionel Clarke and Rex Pullen.

Front Row: Denis Reedman, Russ Caro, Lloyd Palmer and Ken McCoy.

Known Missing: Ted Pellet and Roy Cleland (Roy Cleland attended the 50th Memorial, however, was absent at the Survivors Dinner whilst Ted Pellet was unable to attend Armidale 50th Reunion).

SPEECH FOR SURVIVOR'S DINNER

ARMIDALE - 1.12.92

I think I speak for all the survivors when I say that this is a bitter-sweet experience for us - bitter because we still feel that so many good blokes lost their lives quite needlessly. These fine young men were robbed of another 50 years of life because of shocking errors of judgment back in Darwin. When we got the order to go back into Betano Bay, in Timor, with 10 hours of daylight left, I think we realized this would be the end for "Armidale" and probably the end for us, too, and for some of us it was. That was bad enough, but there was more to come that would make us bitter. When we got back we were treated as if somehow or other it was our fault that we had lost our ship and that we had made the heirarchy most embarrassed by surviving. The whole botch-up was swept under the carpet and those in high places pretended it had not happened. "Armidale" became the forgotten ship and we became the forgotten men.

Those are the reasons for our bitterness and I am sure that you who lost loved ones in "H.M.A.S. Armidale" would share that bitterness. I have given quite a lot of thought about whether I should mention this at such a gathering, because I was afraid it might upset some of you. If it has, please forgive me, but there is a reason for my raising it with you. I suggest that the time has now come for all of us to bury our bitterness in the past, because at last "Armidale" is no longer the forgotten ship and we are no longer the forgotten men, and the ceremonies we have shared today are eloquent testimony to that. The Navy, which virtually shunned us 50 years ago, has done us proud and its gesture in sending a ship to cast a wreath over the wreck of "Armidale" is not only moving but also highly significant. We now feel that we are part of the Navy family again. The City of Armidale, which knew very little about the ship that bore its name, now knows a lot about the ship and and those who sailed in her and the city is honouring us with a permanent place in its history.

Tonight those of us who were lucky enough to survive pay tribute to our shipmates who did not. It was luck, pure luck, the bounce of the ball, the toss of the coin, call it what you will, that decided who would survive and who would not. We think of those unlucky ones more often than many of you would believe. We think of them as keen, eager and happy youngsters who loved their ship and who knew from the day they joined her that they might have to sacrifice their lives for their country and that is what they did, without flinching, bravely and resolutely.

To those of you who lost loved ones in "H.M.A.S. Armidale", may I say that we who survived also lost great mates in that ship too. We had been together only six months but in that time we had got to know each other pretty well, as you would expect when 85 men are locked in an iron box 55 metres long and 10 metres wide that swayed, bounced and bumped around the sea like a roller-coaster. Your grief is our grief, too.

There is now, for us all, some comfort in the fact that their heroism and sacrifice is now recognised, not only in the City of Armidale but all around Australia. The most spectacular hero, of course, was Teddy Sheean and many of us owe our lives to his gallantry. It is indeed fitting that one of the new submarines being built for the Royal Australian Navy is to be named "H.M.A.S. Sheean". But Teddy Sheean was not the only hero in "H.M.A.S. Armidale" and when "H.M.A.S. Sheean" is commissioned, we can all feel that she represents all the other brave men who served in our ill-fated little corvette.

I would like to propose a toast to all our old shipmates who are not with us today. We will never forget them.

Rex Pullen
Survivor

Ordinary Seaman Edward (Teddy) Sheean was only 18 years old when he died.

His ship "H.M.A.S. Armidale", an R.A.N. corvette, was sunk on 1st. December, 1942, by Japanese aerial torpedoes. She sank in the Arafura Sea about 150 kilometres off the south-east coast of Timor.

With two torpedoes hitting down the port side and a near miss from a bomb which damaged the starboard side the ship listed to port very quickly and Lieut.-Cdr. Richards (the commanding officer) recognising the critical position gave the order to abandon ship. As the crew took to the water, they were relentlessly strafed by the Japanese aircraft gunners and many of our crew were killed or wounded as a result. Teddy Sheean was one of the wounded. He moved toward the port side as if to abandon ship but instead turned and dragged himself to the after oerlikan gun which had been his action station. No doubt he had seen his mates being strafed and wanted his revenge. He refused to be kicked while he was down! Teddy strapped himself to the gun and immediately opened fire on the aircraft which were continuing the onslaught. At this time the ship was going down by the head and with heroic determination he continued his attack until the "Armidale", having taken a second torpedo, slipped quietly under the water, taking the gallant gunner with her.

As the Arafura Sea closed over the stern, his gun was still firing. Teddy Sheean had given his life for his Country and his mates in true Australian tradition

During the short action, which lasted possibly three minutes plus, Sheean had shot down one bomber and observers credit him with damaging two others. For this incredible and unselfish action, he was posthumously "Mentioned in Despatches"! The action had passed almost unnoticed. In later years an endeavour was made to have this Award replaced by a "Victoria Cross" granted posthumously, but to no avail.

Those of us who survived well remember Teddy's action, for who knows, we too may have perished at the hands of the Japanese gunners except for his bravery.

At the time the "Armidale" was on a mission to take off Australian troops at Betano, Timor. When she sank half of her compliment was lost, as were sixty Javanese soldiers who were to have been put ashore on Timor. Great courage and endurance on the part of those who survived reflected credit on the Royal Australian Navy discipline.

We who survived the "Armidale" are grateful that Teddy's action has been acknowledged here today. Also, one of the six "Collins" class submarines presently being built for the Royal Australian Navy will bear the name "H.M.A.S. Sheean" in recognition of Teddy's action 50 years ago. I believe this is the first ever occasion that an R.A.N. ship has been named after a lower deck rating. May all Australians remember his heroic stand and may the residents of the Latrobe Municipality, in particular, keep the Teddy Sheean Legend in perpetuity.

Thank you.

Rex Pullen
